

Ágnes Fülemile is a senior research fellow at the Institute of Ethnology at the RCH of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest and the editor-in-chief of the journal Acta Ethnographica Hungarica. She has MA degrees in ethnography, history and art history, MPhil in history of dress from the Courtauld Institute of University of London, and a PhD in European ethnology from ELTE, Budapest. She was a Fulbright visiting scholar at the Anthropology Department of UC Berkeley (1992), the Costume Institute of The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (1993), and at Rutgers University with teaching obligation (1999). In 2006-2009 she was the visiting Hungarian Chair Professor of the Central Eurasian Studies Department at Indiana University, Bloomington. While working as the director of the Balassi Institute's Hungarian Cultural Center in New York (2012-2014), she curated the Hungarian Heritage: Roots to Revival program of the annual Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington, DC. on the National Mall in 2013. Besides her research work, she regularly teaches American students in study abroad programs in Budapest.